Once again I would like to bring up the possibility of maintaining a small flow of water down Pot Creek from Crouse Reservoir to the Colorado Line and through the Colorado property owners during the summer months.

Many times the Colorado users get their allotment at once and some goes to waste, going through them and dumps into the Green river. With their permission it looks like it would be more beneficial to have a steady flow.

Likewise, the Utah Department of Natural Resources take water down Crouse Canyon. Crouse Canyon has a nice bunch of springs that run the year around. Some of this water that is being taken from Crouse Reservoir might be more beneficial to not only the land owners but all sorts of big game, small game and non game species.

I would like to propose that a committee be selected to look into this and see what possibilities exist. The committee could be made up of land owners, BLM, Dept. of Natural Resources and both Utah and Colorado Water Divisions and any other interested parties. Hopefully this could be done at a minimal expense and done on the ground. Perhaps we could come up with some workable solution, beneficial to all, at very little cost.

Sincerely,

George R. Miller
